

FINANCIAL ABUSE

FINANCIAL ABUSE: SUMMARY

Key messages about financial abuse:

- It is a form of family violence
- It is often used to trap a person in an abusive relationship
- It is common, and can happen to anyone

- Financial abuse can include many things, like controlling and preventing a person's access to money, stopping them from getting a job or forcing them to get loans they don't want.
- If someone is experiencing financial abuse, it is not their fault – it is a choice made by the person perpetrating financial abuse to exert power and control.
- While financial abuse can be different for different people, there are similarities in the impact that those who have experienced it describe, for example:
 - Feeling trapped
 - Being made to feel incompetent
 - Feeling dependent and powerless

FINANCIAL ABUSE: DEEP DIVE

Key messages about financial abuse:

- Financial abuse is a form of family violence and it is against the law
- It is often used to trap a person in an abusive relationship
- It can happen to anyone – 1 in 4 women and 1 in 13 men experience violence by an intimate partner, and up to 90% of those who seek support are also affected by financial abuse

Financial abuse has been described as a hidden epidemic as it is much less reported on and documented than physical or psychological abuse.

Financial abuse can occur throughout a relationship, or may begin after you and your partner have split up through things like property settlement and child support processes. Some examples of financial abuse include:

- Financial Control – controlling day-to-day household finances such as
 - Closely monitoring a person's spending
 - Giving them a small allowance
 - Limiting access to money such as bank accounts or benefits
 - Being excluded from making financial decisions
- Financial Exploitation – manipulation of the household finances including:
 - Forcing a person to take on debt, sign documents or claim welfare
 - Forcing a person to work in a family business without getting paid
- Financial Sabotage – sabotaging a person's capacity to be financially independent, such as:
 - Stopping a person from attending work or study
 - Destroying a person's work product
- Institutional or Systemic Abuse – use of the system to disadvantage a person, such as:
 - Refusing to pay child support
 - Drawing out legal proceedings

There can be warning signs

Your partner might be abusive if they:

- Want to join finances early in your relationship
- Are pressuring you to get a joint bank account or second credit card
- React badly when you try to talk to them about money, making you scared to bring it up

There are ways to help protect yourself against financial abuse and its impact

- Open your own mail
- Regularly check your bank/credit card statements for unauthorised transactions
- Keep your passwords and login information secure
- Don't sign documents you don't understand
- Seek independent advice if you are unsure something is in your best interests
